Yeltsin Balks On Pullout Of Forces From Baltics

Despite Clinton Nudge, Russia Says It Will Keep 2,000 Troops in Estonia

By Douglas Jehl
New York Times Service

NAPLES — Despite prodding from President Bill Clinton, President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia said Sunday that he would not meet a commitment to withdraw all Russian forces from the Baltic nations by Aug. 31.

Mhile promising that Latvia would join Lithuania by that deadline in being finally firee of Russian troops, Mr. Yeltsin said he would not pull back the 2,000 soldiers that his country has left stationed in Estonia until that country agrees to grant wider rights to retiring officers who stay behind.

rights to retiring officers who stay behind.
On the day that Mr. Yeltsin joined the leaders of the seven major industrial democracies as a full participant for the first time at their annual summit meeting, his declaration on the Baltics provided a stark reminder of the differences that remain between Russia and the other nations.

It also gave a new glimpse of the stillcomplicated relationship between Russia and the states it once occupied.

With Mr. Clinton looking on in apparent displeasure, Mr. Yeltsin complained about "very crude violations of human rights" in Estoma, which declared independence in 1991 after 46 years of Soviet occupation.

He said Estonia's refusal to grant citizenship and provide housing to Russian military retirees had left Moscow's relationship with that country "somewhat more difficult" than with its Baltic neighbors.

Mr. Yeltsin did agree to meet with President Lennart Meri of Estonia in hopes of resolving their differences, and his public hard-line stance may in part have been a uegotiating ploy.

U.S. officials said the promise of faceto-face discussions between the Russianand Estonian leaders represented the "significant progress" that Mr. Clinton claimed during a joint news conference to have made in his pinness said with the Russian leader.

But when asked immediately afterward whether he intended to honor his own Aug. 31 deadline. Mr. Yeltsin replied with a blunt "nyet," bringing a flash of tension to a day in which the gathered leaders tried otherwise to show that they held common cause on trouble spots from Bosnia to North Korea.

As they concluded their three-day summit here, Mr. Clinton and his fellow G-7

G-7 Shrugs Off Weak Dollar as Summit Ends

NAPLES — Leaders of the world's seven richest industrial democracies ended their annual economic summit meeting here Sunday determined to ride out the vicissitudes of the volatile financial markets that have pushed the dollar to historic lows against the yen and sent long-term interest rates searing.

During a generally harmonious two-day meeting. President Bill Clinton and his counterparts from the other Group of Seven industrialized nations tried repeatedly to put a brave face on the dollar's weakness. In their effort to collectively jawbone financial markets, they stressed that underlying economic fundamentals in G-7 countries were sound and announced that their finance ministers and central bankers would meet more frequently "to enhance the ongoing process of multilateral surveillance and policy cooperation."

In their final communique, the G-7 leaders hailed what they termed improved conditions for a sustained, low-inflation economic recovery. They also reaffirmed their determination to take steps to battle unemployment, and committed themselves to further moves to help Russia, Ukraine and other East European countries in their transition toward a market economy.

But the communique made no explicit mention of the G-7's nearly unanimous view that the dollar is currently underval-

North Korea Orders Urgent Meeting Amid Signs of Calm Transition

By T. R. Reid

Washington Post Service

SEOUL — The North Korean government ordered members of the national Parliament and Workers' Party leaders from around the nation to gather in Pyongyang on Monday for a mass meeting that could mean the official declaration of Kim Jong II as the Communist state's new supreme ruler.

The special session could merely be part of the oational mourning for Kim II Sung, analysts here said, but it might also mean that the late ruler's son had successfully consolidated power in the three days since his father's death.

South Korean officials monitoring radio broadcasts said that Pyongyang's state oews agency had started referring to Kim Jong II, 52, hy the exalted title "Great Leader," a term that had previously only been applied to his father. This was a significant semantic promotion for the younger Mr. Kim, previously known as

"Dear Leader."

The fragments of information coming out of the hermit oation all seemed to indicate a fairly calm and smooth transition of power to Kim Jong II. But officials here coted that Kim Jong II, the regime's propaganda expert, runs the radio octwork—and that might account for the absence of any reports of opposition.

Complete control of broadcasting has been an important tool of dominance for the Kim clique that has ruled North Korea since the natioo was formed at the dawn of the Cold War, Radios and television sets sold in the North can receive only two stations—the two state oetworks.

On Sunday, North Korean television broadcast dramatic footage of an outpouring of weeping citizens who turned out by the thousands in Pyongyang to mourn their late leader. The man who ruled for 49 years before his death at 82 was virtually worshiped by the people because of the myth — taught as history in all North Korea schools — that he was the man who defeated Japan in World War II and thus liberated Korea from colonial rule.

to achieve what no other Communist leaders could manage, a hereditary succession from father to son.

As further evidence that a quick transition to the rule by the son was in the works, North Korean officials at the U.S.-Korea talks in Geneva asked their American counterparts to stay in Geneva and be prepared for a quick resumption of the negotiations, which were suspended Saturday with word of President Kim's death.

Even if Kim Jong Il successfully assumes power oow, analysts have warned that he may not be able to rule uneventfully for long.

North Korea is one of the poorest and most primitive oations on earth. Over the past year or so, visitors have reported widespread famine and misery among the 22 million North Koreans. Even in Pyoogyang, a showcase city that is the closest North Korea comes to modern convenience, electricity and water supplies often function only three hours per day, recent visitors say.

The apparent love for Kim Il Sung among the populace probably helped people put up with the deprivation. But the son lacks both the historic stature and the cheery charisma of his father, and might find it harder to maintain order.

"Kim Il Sung was able to put his son in place," Park Doo Shik, a columnist, wrote Sunday in the Sooth Korean newspaper NAPLES — Secretary of State Warreo M. Christopher expressed nervousness and uncertainty Sunday about the aftermath of Kim Il Sung's death.

"With a country with the history of North Korea, with the sudden death of the leader of the country, I think it's a time for real vigilance and careful watching by the United States," Mr. Christopher said in a televised interview. "We had some important talks under way with them. We hope they will continue."

"But I think the present watchword ought to be vigilance," he said. "Fortuoately, there's oo indication that there's been any unusual or threatening buildup by North Korea, but until the uncertainty of this moment is resolved, I think the United States should be in a very careful position."

In Geneva on Sunday, the North Korean delegation said its oegotiations with the United States had been suspended until after Kim Il Sung's funeral on Sunday. The U.S.-North Korea talks had opened

Friday oo an upbeat oote, as both sides declared their efforts "useful and productive."

The negotiations are aimed at resolving international concerns over North Korea's suspected ouclear weapons program. In return, North Korea would receive diplomatic and economic benefits.

Speculation about the future of the ou-clear talks focused Sunday on the question of whether Kim Jong II will take a more hard-line position than his father regarding U.S. demands, possibly to shore up support among military officers loyal to the elder Mr. Kim but skeptical of the son's abilities.

As for Kim Jong II, the North Korean president's son and designated heir, Mr. Christopher said, "We know relatively little about him, frankly."

"We've not had cootact with him, and he's been largely out of the press and out of public appearances in recent years," he said. "There's some indication that he's been involved in the important decisions of the country. We think he may have been involved in the decision to start the talks in Geneva, as well as the North-South talks, but we'll have to be in a watchful, waiting situation with respect to him."

Earlier, Mr. Christopher said that the United States would consider a meeting with Kim Jong II if he succeeds his father, but only if North Korea assures the interoational community that its nuclear program is oot involved in producing weapons.

"One of the problems we've had in the past has been isolation," Mr. Christopher said. "We would welcome the opportunity over time to get to know Kim Jong II better, but there would have to be a sequential series of steps — that is, they

NEW YORK — A nationwide poil of American teenagers suggests that many lead fives shadowed by adult concerns like violence, drinking and getting a good job, but these are worries that many say they cannot share with adults.

Many appear to five in virtually separate worlds from adults. Four in 10 say their parents sometimes or often do not take time to help them, and many say the people they both trust and fear the most are other teenagers.

A total of 40 percent of teenagers surveyed said they knew someone who had been shot in the last five years, and most of those said that both the attacker and the victim were other teenagers.

Moreover, 13 percent said that at least half the students in their schools carried weapons like knives and guns, and another 16 percent said some students were armed. A third said at least some classmates had cheated on the last test they took, and most confessed to cheating at Amid these very grown-up troubles, many teenagers still ding to some remnants of their early childhoods. Many say their most cherished possessions are stuffed animals or baseball card collections.

And while many sounded blase about drinking or cheating, they often made harsh moral judgments about themselves, wishing they could control their tempers or be nicer to others.

The survey, conducted May 26 to June 1 by The New York Times and CBS News, was a telephone poll of 1,055 teenagers, 13 to 17 years old. It has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points. This was the first poll of teenagers these organizations have conducted, so it cannot be used to deduce changes in attitudes and behavior over time.

Many of today's adolescents feel estranged from their parents. Four in 10 said their parents were sometimes or often unavailable to them, a result that did not appear to depend on whether their mothers worked outside the home.

In follow-up interviews, many said their parents were not spending much time with them or communicating well with them.

While many teenagers said they would not want their parents riding herd on them anyway, hints of longing crept through the bravado.

"Even when my parents are here, it's like they're not because they don't have any time," said Aaron M., a 16-year-old who lives near Olympia, Washington, and who did oot want his last name used. "We never do anything. We never go out to dinner. We used to do it all the time when we were younger."

For other teenagers, though, parental relationships were less bleak, "Sometimes, I feel like my mom is

The strike could hamper the departure of some delegations and journalists. But Alitalia said it would guarantee a minimum number of flights, including major routes to New York, Bangkok and most European destinations.

Unions are protesting Alitalia's cost-saving plan to cut 4,000 jobs. Last week a two-day strike by flight crews forced Alitalia to cancel half its flights. A planned walkout by air traffic controllers was delayed until later this month.

Special Prosecutor Spurns Congress

WASHINGTON - Robert B. Fiske Jr., the Whitewater independent prosecutor, has rebuffed a congressional committee that asked him to testify later this month about some of the issues he is investigating.

Mr. Fiske declined an invitation to testify before the House Banking Committee. The committee a chairman, Henry B. Gonzalez, Democrat of Texas, released his correspondence with the prosecutor.

In a letter to the committee, Mr. Fiske wrote: "I believe it would be inappropriate and would compromise my ability to function effectively as an independent counsel if I were to appear before Congress to answer questions about my investigation while a major part of it is still going on."

In a separate letter to Mr. Gonzalez, Mr. Fiske discouraged coogressional testimony by some Clinton administration officials oo the grounds that their appearance could compromise his criminal inquiry. Among the officials that Mr. Fiske said could be involved in his inquiry were two former senior officials at the Justice Department, Philip B. Heymann, the former deputy attorney general, and Webster L. Hubbell, the former associate attorney general.

Undoing a Concession on Air Quality

WASHINGTON - The Clinton administration has moved to overturn one of the biggest concessions President George Bush gave industry during its fierce battle with environmentalists over enforcement of the 1990 Clean Air lo a controversial 1992 decision, Mr. Bush eased the rules under which industries could expand their operations even if the expansion would result in higher levels of emissions than allowed by the permits they had obtained.

During the debate over the issue, environmentalists favored a provision that would have permitted the public to challenge changes in industrial emissions before any expansion could

But the White House Competitiveness Council, under the leadership of Vice President Dan Quayle, argued that such a rule would stymie industrial growth and hamper attempts to hring the country out of recession.

The Environmental Protection Agency administrator, Carol M. Browner, has proposed a rule requiring a period of public comment on potential increases in emissions whenever husinesses apply to expand operations. The rule, which would take effect after a 90-day comment period, would overturn Mr. Bush's earlier decision.

Clinton's AIDS Official Quits Under Fire

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton's chief AIDS policy officer. Kristine M. Gebbie, submitted her resignation after a rocky 11-month tenure.

Her departure had been rumored for weeks. Advocates for people with AIDS had been unhappy with Ms. Gebbie ever since she was oamed and it became clear that she would not be the sort of high-profile administrator in the AIDS battle that the Clinton campaign had promised.

Experts oo AIDS policy said that Ms. Gebhie, a former health commission in the state of Washington, had been hampered by the ill-defined nature of her job. And while they credited her with good intentions, they said her lack of political savvy had prevented her from making something of a job with little authority.

The budget for AIDS care and research has increased substantially under Mr. Clinton, and prevention programs are being completely reorganized. Those were two of the major demands that groups active oo behalf of people with AIDS and HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, made before Mr. Clinton's election. But Ms. Gebbie was seen as having little to do with those developments. (NYT)

In California, the state with the second-highest ratio of uninsured people to total population, Senator Dianne Feinstein, a Democrat seeking re-election, spent her time not on health care but on events geared to the crime issue, which carries none

"Violence is the No. 1 issue in the state of California today," Ms. Peinstein said in an interview. "Next to that, I would have to say people are worried about whether they have a joh today, and at the end of the year."

The current absence of any public passion on health care is bad news for the White House, threatening to diminish the president's ability to pressure lawmakers to meet his line-inthe-sand demand for universal coverage and his proposal for some form of requirement that employers pay for it. Beyond that, many advocates of a health-care overhaul believe, the silence could jeopardize efforts to reach consensus on a compromise,

Backers of the president's proposal predict that interest will be rekindled when the issue advances to the House and Senate floors later this summer and the nation begins to focus on specific legislation.

Their best hope, they say, is that incumbents of both parties will realize that health care's political risk is double-edged: tacke; for backing a given pro-

Polls show that despite some nervousness over other elements, most Americans favor the plan's cornerstones; universal insurance and employer mandates. But, the findings suggest, the same people have reservations about the anthor.

These experts contend that policymakers. diplomats, strategists and journalists focus on economie assets, military forces and social and political rivalries while scarcely noting the role of religion. When a Central Intelligence Agency analyst proposed an examination of the leading religious leaders in Iran when the shah was still on the Peacock Throne, the idea was rejected as irrelevant. And so the ayatollahs went largely unnoticed.

In "Religion: The Missing Dimensioo of Statecraft," a collection of studies that Oxford University Press will publish next month, the center's scholars say one reason religion is slighted in U.S. statecraft is the principle of the separation of church and state and the resulting tendency of American culture to relegate religioo to the realm of the

Mr. Carter said last week that Mr. Kim told him at the time that he planned to "remain active for the next 10 years."

For half a century, North Korea has been essentially a family business headed by Kim Il Sung, whose image is cap-tured in monuments in every town and who is credited, in the national mythology and in song, with the country's creation and development.

His cult of personality is everywhere, celehrated in "mass games" on his birthday that in-Mr. Kim, 82, revered throughout the country as the "Great Leader," is reported to have collapsed with a heart atnational self-reliance.

Years ago, in an attempt to create something of a Stalinist dynasty, Mr. Kim designated his son, known as the "Dear Leader," as his successor.

But there have been persistent doubts over whether the younger Mr. Kim, a reclusive and deeply mysterious man who, according to Western indent Jimmy Carter in which he agreed to freeze North Korea's mentally stable, would win the

But such a process could take years. There is little understanding of the country's leadership elite beyond the elder Mr. Kim, who has been widely regarded as the only man able to make major decisions for the

With the nation's economy shrinking and its factories grinding to a halt, Mr. Kim's "Paradise on Earth," as his propaganda machine calls it, seems headed toward collapse.

Its nuclear program, which may or may not have already succeeded in producing one or two weapons, has in the past two years become the biggest security crisis in Asia.

Mr. Kim was installed by Stalin shortly after the end of World War II.

Born on the outskirts of Pyongyang, in a thatch house that is visited daily by thou-sands of North Koreans, he spent nearly 20 years of his youth in Manchuria, the North Korean border areas and the oviet Union as a guerrilla fighter against the Japane Shortly after the official cre-

Since then the Demilitarized Zone dividing North and South has been the most heavilyarmed outpost of the Cold War, and 36,000 American troops are still stationed near it.

For years it appeared that his country would be the stronger of the two Koreas: It had all the raw materials and, until the early 1960s, a healthier economy. But that reversed as the capitalist South, with aid from the United States and Japan and a population of 42 million compared to 22 million in the North -- surged ahead as a producer of steel, cars and semiconductors.

The North, diplomatically isolated, went into slow decline, increasingly dependent on China and the Soviet Union for oil and critical industrial goods.

Its own industrial base was left over from the Japanese occupation, save for some major projects that President Kim was credited with directing with "on the spot guidance."

War, however, Mr. Kim was quickly abandoned by his allies. Russia embraced the South, cager for its aid and technological China also opened relations with Seoul, and Mr. Kim, on periodic trips to Beijing, was greeted with airport signs for Samsung, the huge South Korean conglomerate. Recently, South Korea's leaders began visiting Moscow and Beijing regularly.

To save his regime, Mr. Kim turned to the nuclear option. He developed a small reactor at Yongbyon, a heavily guarded military installation north of the capital, into a sprawling nuclear complex. While he signed the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty in 1985, he refused to allow inspectors into his country until two years ago. And since that time, he has conducted an increasingly tense cat-and-mouse game with the United Nations and the United States, keeping inspectors at bay.

New York Times Service
TOKYO — Kim Jong II, the man who is expected to be the next leader of North Korea, has been described as a ruthless terrorist, a spoiled playboy and an erratie manager who will have trouble keep-ing control of his country.

But perhaps the only thing that can be said with certainty about him is that very little is known about him.

Most foreign visitors to North Korea, mchiding former President Jimmy Car-ter on his recent trip, have been turned down when they asked to meet Kim Jong II, 52, who has been groomed for two decades to take over from his father, Kim Il Sung, who died Friday.

They are generally told that he is out in the villages working with peasants or that it would be impolite for Mr. Kim to upstage his father.

Even North Koreans, while worship-ing the younger Kim as the "Dear Lead-er" and putting pictures of him in their homes, had never heard his voice until two years ago. Some analysts say that Mr. Kim has had effective day-to-day control of the government for about two years.

might be given a chance to run the country, although he might have to share some power with other groups, Mr. Kim was born on Feb. 16, 1942, probably in the Soviet Union, where his father was fighting with the Soviet Army. Perhaps because it is not fitting for a nation's leader to have been born abroad, the official North Korean biography says Mr. Kim was born in a secret camp of anti-Japanese guernilas on Mount Packdn, a sacred mountain in North Korea.

Kim Jong Il's stepmother, Kim Song Ae, who attended some of the meetings between Kim Il Sung and former President Carter, is viewed as the younger Kim's rival for power.

The nuclear issue is at the center of a long crisis that recently-revived talks in Geneva between the United States and North Korea were intended to resolve. It also is a question that preoccupies the broader international community, as was shown Sunday by the Group of Seven industrial democracies in a joint statement at the end of their annual summit meeting The seven, joined by Russia, urged

North Korea to restore international safeguards and to "provide total transparency in its nuclear program through full and unconditional compliance with its nonproliferation obligations." The leaders specifically demanded that

The planned North-South summit conference and the Geneva meeting resulted: from talks in Pyongyang last month between President Kim and former President Jimmy Carter of the United States.

Speaking to reporters in Naples on Saturday, President Bill Clinton said North Korea had indicated to the South that the first meeting ever between leaders of the divided peninsula would go ahead as planned on July 25. But on Sunday the White House backed away from that statethat there had been "no formal contact between North and South." Many analysts agree that the younger Mr. Kim has long been the principal figure in charge of his country's muclear activi-ties, including an alleged decision to pro-duce enough plutonium from 1989 to 1992 for one to two nuclear weapons. He also is said to have defied United Nations threats of economic sanctions by approving the withdrawal, without international observation, of fuel rods from a nuclear reactor.

Assistant Secretary of State Robert L. Gallucci, referring to the nuclear issue in a television interview on Sunday said: "There is a great deal of uncertainty about exactly what course North Korea will follow in the future. Sideshow at G-7: Hunt for EU Chief

NAPLES - The leaders of the European Union's four biggest powers - Germany, France, Italy and Britain - engaged in frenetic but fruitless consultations during the Group of Seven summit meeting here as they struggled to come up with a successor to Jacques De-lors, the outgoing president of the European Commission.

The scramble for a new president — the topic of bilateral conversations at the margins of the gathering — was said by government officials to have failed to produce satisfactory

The matter is increasingly urgent because Chancellor Heimut Kohl of Germany has called a special summit meeting of EU leaders on July 15 in Brussels to decide on a successor. Mr. Kohl scheduled the Brussels meeting after Prime Minister John Major of Britain vetoed the French-German choice of the Belgian prime minister, Jean-Luc Dehaene, during last month's EU meeting in Corfu, Greece.

Q&A: Melding the Markets Into Political Life

The annual economic summit of the Group of Seven industrialized nations ended on Sunday in Naples. Accompamying President Bill Clinton was Robert Rubin, the former co-chairman of Goldman Sachs who serves as the president's assistant for economic policy. He discussed financial markets, and domestic and international economic issues with Alan Friedman of the International Herald Tribune.

Q. In your view, what were the key ishments here in Naples? A. The most important thing is that the combination of last year's Tokyo summit; the recent G-7 jobs conference in Detroit and this summit has helped us to re-energize the G-7 and to broaden its focus. And looking to next year's summit in Halifax, we are now examining the kind of world economy we will want to see after the year 2000. Q. There has been much discussion here in Naples of the weak dollar and of financial markets in general. Has your perspective on markets changed, coming from Wall Street to the White House?

A. I don't think my understanding of markets has changed. What has struck me is that over the last five years the financial markets have changed enormously. They have become more global, increased vastly in size and invented a panoply of new instruments such as derivatives.

Q. And how has that change affected policymakers?

A. The markets have become much more relevant to economic life. Most people in political life are not very knowledgeable about the workings of financial markets. I suspect that poliucians and government leaders in years to come will know a lot more about markets because markets are much more important to their lives.

Q. Given the recent turbulence in bond and currency markets, what is the best advice you can give President Clinton now?

A. I think the best thing is for him to be focused, concerned, serious and to deal with long-term issues of the economy. And that's what he is doing. There should be a real concern about currency fluctuations, but the long-term fundamentals are right.

Q. How do you analyze the way bond markets have forced up longterm interest rates?

A. For a long time the rates were affected by deficits, which caused inflationary expectations. Once the markets saw what we did to tackle the deficit, that factor was taken out of the bond market. Over time I think long-term rates will fluctuate with

Q. Are U.S. long-term interest rates currently too high? A. Maybe. It's hard to tell.

Q. European leaders are worried that their high long-term rates could threaten recovery. Are European rates too high?

A. It strikes me that European longterm rates are too high.

Q. Are governments progressively ceding control of economic policy to

A. I don't think they are ceding control, but I think markets are globalized and have increased vastly in size and as a consequence it is more difficult for governments to affect

Q. Are you frustrated by that phenomenon? A. Not really.

Q. Here in Naples, G-7 leaders have pledged to get the GATT accord rati-fied by the end of the year. How confident are you that this will happen in the United States?

A. The probabilities are high but it's not certain.

Q. What are the potential obstacles to ratification? A. There is the funding problem. We have to come up with spending cuts and revenue increases to make up for about $10.5 hillion of tariff cuts. And those moves will be announced when we get agreement on Capitol Hill. The second problem is making sure we have fast-track authority to negotiate future treaties, which is attached to the GATT ratification and is very important to us.

Q. What are your top priorities back in Washington?

A. Health care is one. The polls are consistently showing that 70 percent of the American people want universal coverage. The president wants it as a social objective and as an economic objective.

Q. Realistically, can some form of a health care package be approved this vear?

A. With 70 percent of the people saying they want it, I think Congress will not want to go to the voters this November without a health care pack-

Q. What are your other priorities? A. We need the Re-Employment Act passed, plus we need new schools legislation and more of a focus on inner cities, on the problems of the urban poor, or what are sometimes called the underclass.

Q. You have also worked on China issues, and the recent decision to renew most-favored-nation status for Beijing despite its human rights violations. Has President Clinton now swapped the moral high ground for

A. The highest-growth part of the world is likely to be Asia, and China is likely to be the largest economy in the world a few decades out, so the president feels that engagement will serve as the best strategy.

Japanese Leader Misses Day at Talks Due to Illness

NAPLES - Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama of Japan rejoined the Group of Seven summit meeting Sunday for a final day of political husiness after missing a day because of stomach problems.

Looking healthy and upbeat, Mr. Murayama, 70, joined his six fellow G-7 leaders as they posed with President Boris N. Yeltsin for a photo. Television footage later showed Mr. Murayama seated at the leaders' table, smiling broadly and

He was hospitalized Friday night after he became ill during a state dinner. Doctors said he suffered from dehydration and an intestinal ailment.

Ironically, European governments have welcomed several of Mr. Clinton's most public policy reversals because the shifts moved the U.S. position closer to theirs and averted the danger of a rift in the alliance. During the endgame phase of world trade negotiations that had languished nearly seven years, France threatened to velo an agreement if it eliminated subsidies for its farmers or filmmakers, Mr. Clinton intervened just days ahead of the Dec. 15 deadline and effectively caved in to the French position. His concessions were praised for salvaging a trade pact whose demise could have damaged prospects for world economic recovery.

Mr. Clinton's action here, in calling for a fresh review of world trade harriers, appeared designed to broach such issues as telecommunications, financial services and aviation that were dropped from the last trade round to secure a deal. But the allies were unprepared to accept a new round of trade

North Korean Transition

Reassure the Successor

Kim Il Sung's death comes at a critical moment, just days after he had personally eased mounting tensions over North Korea's noclear program by mov-ing to resume talks with the United States. President Bill Clinton struck the right note, expressing appreciation for Mr. Kim's role in recent days and reassuring the North that he wants a continuing and "personal" dialogue with his successor after an appropriate hiatus to mark Mr. Kim's passing. A delay poses no risk, with international inspectors in place to assure that the North's nuclear freeze remains in force. Wasbington can only hope that the son and heir apparent, Kim Jong II, will follow in his father's footsteps and choose negotiation over confrontation.

The legitimacy of North Korea's regime is critical to resolving the nuclear question. Founding father Kim had ruled longer than any other sitting world leader. After nearly half a century in power, he adopted a uniquely Korean form of succession, melding communism with dynastic rule.

He had begun to devolve day-to-day responsibilities to his son when the collapse of the Soviet empire and of the Soviet Union itself called the legitimacy of communism into question.

North Korea remained somewhat insulated from these larger currents. Its doctrine of self-reliance made it impervious to the shifting ideological winds, eveo in oeighboring China. And its economy relied on outsiders for only a few necessities like subsidized oil. But North Korea suffered grievously from the loss of its Soviet and East European trading partners. And its nuclear program made it an international outcast. only deepening economic distress.

A Deal Still on the Table

Most Americans knew North Korea's Kim Il Sung not as his country's anti-Japanese resistance leader, founding fa-ther and ruler for more than 50 years hut as an aggressor, terrorist, fanatical Communist and creator of a surreal personality cult who had enslaved his 21 million people, made his nation a prototype of a rogue state and seemed bent on acquiring a nuclear bomh. So outside of North Korea, which faces the unprecedented shock of its first succession, mourning for his death will be brief.

It is the commanding irony of the Korean comundrum, however, that this same Kim Il Sung had become the principal repository of American hopes to coovert what is the Cold War's last armed and war-prooe frootier into an accommodation in which North Korea would abandoo its nuclear aspirations in return for an accepted economie and political place in the world.

Now one American nightmare is coming true. Instead of dealing with the single Korean leader with a considerdeal, either the United States will be engaged with a regime headed by the late leader's son and designated successor, Kim Jong II, someooe currently known for his lack of popular standing and political weightiness, or it will be exchange rate against the dollar.

'Bretton Woods' Advice

No successioo is a sure thing, and the younger Kim's impulses have worried some American observers. Officials around him may he inclined to tough it out; to rally domestic support, they would stress time-tested themes of selfreliance and the need to stand up to a hostile world, especially the United States. With that posture, they might want the bomh for protection.

But the elder Kim seemed to recognize the limits of that posture and quietly resumed a larger role to assure a smooth succession. He recognized that North Korea could not keep up with South Korea militarily; to try would risk economie collapse. And he knew that the tough-it-out posture would give the military too much influence over a successor regime. He resolved to seek a peace treaty and diplomatic relations with the Umited States, opening the way to security assurances and economie ties with the rest of the world.

To achieve such a breakthrough, he was willing to put plutonium reprocess-ing on hold and allow international inspectors to verify that. Now the hope is that his son will see the wisdom of his father's ways. Continued reassurance from Mr. Clinton could help.

Hawks in Washington want to resolve the nuclear issue by destabilizing the Communist regime. But that risks a war that none of the North's neighbors want. The hawks' approach would likely revive the North's alliance with China. More important, it would risk an open breach with U.S. allies South Korea and Japan, which want both a stable and a non-nuclear Korean Peninsula.

President Clinton is right to embrace those goals and reassure the new leader in the North that he wants to deal with him, not destabilize him.

It is not a formula for confidence, but it is a time for steadiness. Preparations for a serious occopiation must continue: these preparations must include a military huildup suitable to counter if not deter any of the dangerous military moves that North Korea has threatened in recent mooths. The United States knows what it wants from a oegotiation, or certainly it should know.

Its purpose must be to contain the threat of a North Korean nuclear capability; that means heading off future bombs and somehow rolling back the one or two bombs that may already be in North Korea's arsenal. In return, Americans have much to offer North Korea in terms of security guarantees and eco-nomie and political cooperation.

That is the deal that was on the table

when the United States and North Korea resumed their direct talks in Geneva on Friday, the day Kim II Sung died. As far as the United States is concerned, this deal ought to remain on the table. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

After Kim Il Sung Comes the Reunification Process

HONG KONG — Korea now has no dominating figures, and no Cold War role. What then will be the focus of achievement on this restless peninsula, where so much energy is bottled up? The most likely answer is nationalism, the one element that North and South have shared, although expressing it so differently — the South seeking to prove Kore-an talents to the world; the North practicing juche (self-reliance), secking identity in a curious combination of Stalinist autarky and the Hermit Kingdom's tradioonal shunning of the foreigner.

With the death of Kim Il Sung, Korean nationalism's focus is likely to be how to achieve peaceful national remification in a way which suits all parties. Unification is something that governments on both sides fear but over which they may have scant control. The inevitability of reunification now moves from the realm of the theoretical to the practical.

Predicting the North's short-term evolution — the fate of Kim Jong II, the role of the army, the course of nuclear policies — is a largely futile exercise. There are obvious dangers of fallout from domestic power struggles.

But for the medium term it is safe to predict an effort toward accommodation. The Northern elite's ability to survive will depend on its ability to deliver some material rewards to a long-suffering popBy Philip Bowring ulation, in the style of post-Mao China. and that in turn depends on the cooperation, and money, of a South that has every reason to want gradual change. Indeed, before the nuclear issue came to dominate relations, North and South had been moving toward direct trade and investment. It made sense both for technocrats in Pyongyang (survivalists, if Peaceful reunification is now manifest destiny. Getting there is going to mean sacrifice.

nothing else) and for capitalists in Seoul for labor-intensive industries to move from Pusan and Taegu to the North rather than, as has in fact happended, to China, Indonesia and Vietnan

Paranoia in Pyonyang was modified to the point of encouraging the develop-ment of border trade with China and Russia, through which news of realities of life in the South as well as among Chinese Koreans must gradually filter. Although North-South dialogue had ground to a halt, recent events have added to Korean national self-awareness. However worried the South has been over Northern nuclear intentions, two attitudes have been apparent.

Firstly, there is a sneaking admiration among many in the South that Koreans may have developed a ouclear capability all on their own and are seen to keep the West and Japan off balance.

Secondly, at the official level, there is a sense that the Korean question ought to be settled by Koreans — an attitude that has led to strains in relationships with the United States, which is seen as having brought a bigger agenda to the nuclear issue than suits Seoul's Korea-centric interests. While American media have been full of war scenarios, for Koreans the subject is too painful for contemplation. South Korea's recently democratized political system has also played a role in national awareness. It has added to the South's pride in its modernization, and it has brought to office a president, Kim Young Sam, who is a competent but not ominant figure. Likewise in the North; whatever happens next, no one can fill Kim Il Sung's oversized boots. The peaceful reunification of Korea is now manifest destiny. But getting there is going to mean sacrifice. Compare the situation with Germany. The barriers to exchange of people and ideas have been much higher, and for longer. The eco-nomic differences are daunting.

East Germany had one-third the population of the Federal Republic, and per capita income was about half. North Korea has half as many people as the South, and per capita income is about one-fifth. Once the industrialized part of Korea, the North now has less than one-fifth the steel output, one-eighth the cement output.

The Northern climate is unsuited for intensive agriculture, so even with 37 percent of the population still on the land (compared with 15 percent in the South)

there is barely enough to eat. The North's economy is roughly where it was in 1970 when it was first surpassed by the South. Estimates of the capital needed over 10 years to bring the North up to Southern levels range from $600. billion to $1 trillion. Even if the process is gradual and controlled, the consequences for the South's increasingly globally oriented economy will be many and massive.
In the long run, a united Korea has every chance of becoming as rich as Japan. That is not a prospect that Japan relishes. China, too, would prefer a divided Korea. But both recognize that divi-sion of the peninsula was an accident of history over which Koreans had little control and which will not last forever. With Kim II Sung having followed the Soviet Union into the history books, the reunification process can begin.

A Scenario for North Korea: Exit Stalin and Enter Caligula

WASHINGTON — Stalin is W gone, but it isn't good news. Caligula is taking his place. That is the reaction of one senior U.S. official to the sudden death of Kim II Sung. The death clears the way for the ascension of his son and designated heir, Kim Jong II, who is thought to be mentally unstable by U.S. intelligence agencies.

The disappearance of Kim II Sung brings America's confron-tation with North Korea over nuclear weapon ambitions to the flash point that U.S. officials most fear. The older Kim was predictable in the way Stalin was predictable: nasty, vicious, hut not crazy. The younger Kim is seen as unpredictable, and less likely to strike the deal that the Clintoo administration is seeking with North Korea.

Ironically, Kim II Sung at age 82 had become an element of stability in the eyes of U.S. officials. His survival was essential to their efforts to stop North Korea from reprocessing enough plutonium to manufacture a halfdozen ouclear weapons, to go with the one or two devices that By Jim Hoagland the CIA believes Pyongyang has already assembled. . The Clinton administration's strategy had been to bypass Kim Jong II, 52, who had asserted more control over foreign and defense policy as his father groomed him for succession. With the elder Kim in charge and aware of the concessions that the United States was will-ing to make to get the North Korean finger off the nuclear trigger, there was just a chance of striking a deal. Getting the message to Kim II Sung was the biggest gain regis-tered by former President Junmy Carter in his controversial meeting with the dictator in Pyongyang last month. Mr. Carter was able to convey the U.S. position directly to the elder Kim, without it being filtered through "Caligula."

Mr. Kim's death tears the bottom out of the U.S. negotiating strategy. The little that American officials thought they knew about the Hermit Kingdom's leadership died with the man who sent North Korean troops across the 38th parallel in 1950 to be beaten back by the U.S. Army. The elder Kim's memory of the beating he took before China intervened had been a key factor in U.S. hopes that he would eventually renounce assembling a nuclear arsenal and back away from another armed confrontation with America. That hope is now seriously di-minished. The formative political experience for the younger Kim was not a military defeat but the kidnapping and terrorizing of a South Korean film actress whom he apparently expected to fall in love with him. He is, in the view of some U.S. officials, a pampered psychopath. The change from Stalin to Ca-ligula leaves Washington with oo attractive options. But for all the problems involved, Washington should stick with the mderstandings that Mr. Carter achieved with Kim Il Sung and attempt to structure a oegotiatthe Carter effort now that Kim II Sung is dead is understandable. The administration was not in any case that happy with the understandings, and the publicity, that Mr. Carter achieved.

Uotil Mr. Kim's death, Mr.

Carter's mission looked like the end of the first phase of the con-flict between Washington and Pyongyang, rather than the deci-sive breakthrough that the for-mer president describes or the capitulation that others fear.

Mr. Carter got the dictator into talks that could conceivably lead to a deal freezing Pyongyang's future nuclear ment. In return, the Korean achieved his overriding goal in the opening game: to preserve permanently the ambiguity around whether or not North Korea has already developed one or two nuclear devices.

By endorsing a concession that effectively abandoned previous U.S. demands that plutonium. taken from North Korea's reactor in 1990 be accounted for by open international inspection, Washington has acknowledged ing process around them.

Washington has acknowledged that the bomb(s) North Korea may have already developed are so much spilt milk.

That is a distasteful and potentially dangerous concession for the region. But Kim Jong Il's intentions — in fact, his very nature and sanity — need to be established through the kind of negotiating process that Mr. Carter has initiated. If this Kim is indeed Caligula, Bill Clinton will have to take immediate steps to shore up the American military presence in South Korea and prepare for war. But that is not yet clearly es tablished. At present, North Korea is a giant inkblot test. Lacking reliable information, outsiders project the past and their interpretation of it onto the blank, street of crisis and isolation or the blank, street of crisis and isolation or the blank, street of the transfer of the street of th

In Our Postmodern World, a Search for Self-Transcendence

DHILADELPHIA - There are good reasons for suggesting that the modern age has end-. Many things indicate that we are going through a transitional period, when it seems that something is on the way out and something else is painfully being born. It is as if something were crum-

The distinguishing features of transitional periods are a mixing and blending of cultures and a plurality or parallelism of intelcrament aid for development. But govlectual and spiritual worlds. I see it as proof that something is being born, that we are in a phase when one age is succeeding another,

THE dizzying development of science, with its unconditional faith in objective reality and complete dependence on general and rationally knowable laws, led to the birth of modern technological civilization. It is the first civilization that spans the entire globe and binds together all societies, submitting them to a common global destiny.

At the same time, the relationship to the world that modern science fostered and shaped appears to have exhausted its potential. The relationship is missing something. It fails to connect with the most intrinsic nature of reality and with natural human experience.

Classical modern science described only the surface of things, a single dimension of reality. And the more dogmatically science treated it as the only dimension, as the very essence of reality, the more misleading it became. We may know immeasurably more about the universe than our ancestors did, and yet it increasingly seems that they knew something more essential about it than we do, something that escapes us.

The same thing is true of nature as of ourselves. The more thorBy Vaclay Havel oughly all our organs and their functions, their internal structure and the biochemical reactions that take place within them, are described, the more we seem to fail to grasp the spirit, purpose and meaning of the system that they create together and that we experience as our unique self.

Thus, we enjoy all the achievements of modern civilization that have made our physical existence casier in so many important ways. Yet we do not know exactly what to do with ourselves, where to turn. The world of our experiences seems chaotic, confusing. Experts can explain anything in the objective world to us, yet we understand our own lives less and less.

WE LIVE in the postmodern world, where everything is possible and almost nothing is certain. This state of affairs has its social and political conse-quences. The planetary civilization to which we all belong confronts us with global challenges. We stand helpless before them because our civilization has essentially globalized only the surface of our lives. But our inner self continues to have a life of its own. And the fewer answers the era of rational knowledge provides to the basic questions of human being, the more deeply it would seem that people cling to the ancient cer-tainties of their tribe.

Because of this, individual cultures, increasingly lumped together by contemporary civilization, are realizing with new urgency their own inner autonomy and the inner differences of other cultures. Cultural conflicts are increasing and are more dangerous today than at any other time in history.

Politicians are rightly worried by the problem of finding the key to ensure the survival of a civilization that is global and multicultural: how respected mechanisms of peaceful coexistence can be set up and on what set of principles they are to be established.

These questions have been highlighted with particular urgency by the two most important political events in the second half of the 20th century: the collapse of colonial hegemony and the fall of communism. The artificial world order of the past decades has collapsed and a new, more just order has not yet emerged.

The central political task of the final years of this century, then, is the creation of a new model of coexistence among the various cultures, peoples, races and religious spheres within a single interconnected civilization. Many believe that this can be accomplished through technical means — the invention of new organizational, political and diplomatic instruments.

Yes, it is clearly necessary to invent organizational structures appropriate to the multicultural age. But such efforts are doomed to failure if they do not grow out of something deeper, out of gen-erally held values. TN SEARCHING for the most

I natural source for the creation of a new world order, we usually look to an area that is the traditional foundation of modern justice and a great achievement of the modern age: to a set of values that were first declared in this building. I am referring to respect. for the unique human being and his or her liberties and inalienable rights, and the principle that all power derives from the people. I am referring to the fundamental ideas of modern democracy.

Eveo these ideas are not enough. We must go farther and deeper. Today, we are in a different place and facing a different situation, one to which classically modern solutions do not give a satisfactory response.

After all, the very principle of inalienable human rights, conferred on man by the Creator, grew out of the typically modern notion that man, as a being capahie of knowing nature and the world, was the pinnacle of creation and lord of the world.

This modern anthropocentrism inevitably meant that He who allegedly endowed man with his inalienable rights began to disap-pear from the world. He was so far beyond the grasp of modern science that He was gradually pushed into a sphere of privacy of sorts, if not directly into a sphere of private fancy — that is, to a place where public ohligations no longer apply. The existence of a higher authority than man himself simply began to get in the way of human aspirations.

The idea of human rights and freedoms must be an integral part of any meaningful world order. Yet I think it must be anchored in a different place, and in a different way, than has been the case so far.

DARADOXICALLY, inspira-I tion for the renewal of this lost integrity can once again be found in science. In a science that is new - postmodern - and producing ideas that in a certain sense allow it to transcend its own limits. I will give two examples. The "anthropic cosmological perhaps as old as humanity itself, that we are not at all just an accidental anomaly, the microwhirling in the endless depths of the universe. Instead, we are mysteriously connected to the universe, we are mirrored in it, just as the entire evolution of the universe is mirrored in us.

The moment it begins to appear that we are deeply connected to the entire universe, science reaches the outer limits of its powers. With the "anthropic cosmological principle," science has found itself on the border between science and myth.

In that, however, science has returned, in a roundabout way, to man, and offers him his lost integrity. It does so by anchoring him once more in the cosmos. The second example is the

"Gaia hypothesis." This theory brings together proof that the dense network of mutual interactions between the organic and inorganic portions of the Earth's surface form a single system, a kind of mega-organism, a living planet, Gaia, named after an ancient goddess recognizable as an archetype of the Earth Mother in perhaps all religions.

According to the Gaia hypothesis, we are parts of a greater whole. Our destiny is not dependent merely on what we do for ourselves but also on what we do for Gaia as a whole. If we endanger her, she will dispense with us in the interests of a higher value - life itself.

What makes the "anthropic principle" and the "Gala hypo-thesis" so inspiring? One simple thing: both remind us of what we have long suspected, of what we have long projected into our forgotten myths and what perhaps has always lain dormant within us as archetypes. That is, the awareness of being anchored in the Earth and the universe — the awareness that we are not here alone nor for ourselves alone but are an integral part of higher, mysterious entities against whom it is not advisable to blaspheme.

This forgotten awareness is encoded in all religions. Cultures anticipate it in various forms. It is one of the things that form the basis of man's understanding of himself, of his place in the world and ultimately of the world as such. This awareness endows us with the capacity for self-transcendence.

POLITICIANS at international forums may resterate a thousand times that the basis of the new world order must be universal respect for human rights, but it will mean nothing as long as this imperative does not derive from the respect of the miracle of Being, the miracle of the universe, the miracle of nature, the miracle of our own existence.

Only someone who submits to the authority of the universal order and of creation, who values the right to be a part of it and a participant in it, can genuinely value himself and his neighbors and thus honor their rights as well. The Declaration of Independence, adopted 218 years ago in this building, states that the Creator gave man the right to liberty. It seems man can realize that liberty only if he does not forget the One who endowed him with it.

The New York Times,

IN OUR PAGES: 100, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1894: Scottdale Riot NEW YORK - A body of 100

negroes unexpectedly marched into Scottdale in Pennsylvania yesterday [July 9] armed with revolvers and clubs. The burgess, Mr. Robinson, called on them to disperse, but they refused and one or two of their number fired at him. The burgess then called a number of citizens to his assistance and a general riot ensued, which resulted in the negroes getting the worst of the encounter and being compelled to flee from the town.

1919: Watching Mexico

NEW YORK - After several years of patient toleration of the turmoil in Mexico, described as "watchful waiting," the United States is prepared to intervene in the Federal Republic. The programme, it is said, will be similar adopted regarding Cuba, occupying all ports and not withdrawing troops until the establishment of a stable government based on law and order and the protection of life and property.

1944: Foreign Forces WASHINGTON - [From our

New York edition:] While all the German officers captured in the fighting on the Cherbourg peninsula were 100 per cent German professional soldiers, a "vast majority" of the regular troops was made op of Russians, Poles, Czechs and some Frenchman, Lieutenant Colooel John K. Daly, observer for the provost marshal, revealed today [July 10] at a press conference. Some of the prisoners were boys of 16 or 17 who had been with the Hitler Youth movement and were used as laborers until the invasion to that which the United States started, when they were armed.

Despite Tension, Experts Insist: Now Is Time to Buy

By Carl Gewirtz

ARIS - The rise of the Deutsche mark against the dollar is renewing pressure on rates within Europe. The mark is also gaining against its neighbors and this, in turn, is putting upward pressure on short-term interest rates as traders begin to fear that such moves will be forced on Germany's allies to defend their currencies.

The French franc slipped past its old support level of 3.4305 per mark to 3.4390 last week, its low for the year. The Belgian franc, the peseta, as well as currencies not formally linked to the mark such as the pound, the lira and the sions also raises the possibility of a reduction in official German rates at the Bundesbank's July 21 policy-making meeting, the last before its summer break. Although investors still are largely sidelined by the upset in all bond markets during the first half of the year and by fears of yet more turbulence, analysis continue to insist that now is the time to resume buying.

resume buying.

It "There's as much risk staying out of the market as there is getting in," advises Sushii Wadhwani at Goldman Sachs in London. Recalling the experience of 1984 when recovery swept financial markets and was completed in three weeks, he notes, "If you weren't already positioned in the market, you missed the recovery." Allowing that prices may yet weaken further. Mr. Wadhwani argues, "It's hard to know exactly when markets hit bottom. On a month view, there's a good probability prices will be lower, but taking a six-month view there's money to be made investing now."

taking a six-month view there's money to be made investing now.". "It's clearly time to start buying," asserts Henry Looser at Bank-Julius Baer in Zurich. "We've seen the worst. The major markets, apart from Britain, should see yields in six months half a point lower than they are today and prices up accordingly."

His preferred investments, he adds, are in Deutsche marks, European Currency Units, guilders, lite and pesetas. Perhaps because German interest rates are expected to decline further, the DM portion of this week's global issue of floating rate notes from Italy is reported to be the least popular. In all, Italy aims to raise the equivalent of $4 billion - at least $1.25 billion, 150 billion yen and 1 billion DM.

That totals some $3.4 billion and managers intend to allot the remainder in response to final demand. All three will carry the same coupon of the London interbank offered rate (Libor). But pricing will be different so that purchasers of yen paper are expected to Decline Of Dollar: Is a Crisis Brewing?

PARIS - Dismayed by the Group of Seven's apparent complacency over the dollar's weakness and the failure of the U.S. and German central banks to adjust their interest rates, analvats are uncertain whether the dollar is headed for a collapse or whether officials last week were trying to bait a trap for speculators.
Under either scenario, the immediate outlook for the dollar is grim. The risk of the dollar's recent decay becoming a crisis has intensified," warns Paul Chertkow, London-based analyst for Union Bank of Switzer-"A new test for the dollar and dollar-denominated assets is imminent," says John Lipsky at Salomon Brothers in New York. "The combined weakness of the dollar as well as that of bond and stock markets suggest that investors consider that U.S. policy is too loose."

The dollar ended trading last week at a 20-month low of 1.5610 Dentsche marks and at 98.055 yea — within spitting distance of its record intra-day low of 96.78 yen. Traders said that volume was light and that in the absence of buyers, the dollar had only one way to

The currency is weighed down by the large and rising U.S. current-account deficit, which provides a constant outflow of dollars looking to be converted to foreign currencies, as well as by the growing disillusion of international investors who loaded up on the dollar earlier this year and who are giving up waiting for its recov-

Colony Regulators

Pursuing 'Big Fish'

From individual stock exchange floor traders to prominent businessmen and establishment banks like Standard Chartered PLC, a growing list of Hong Kong identities are finding themselves on the sharp end of regulatory enforcement. Most people believe that Hong Kong, besmirched by its decision to close its stock and futures exchanges for a few days after the October 1987 market collapse and numerous tales of corporate scandal, should welcome a trend toward

Mr. Chim tends to speak for small, local business interests. Until high-profile Standard Chartered's local merchant bank and stock broking subsidiaries were disciplined for misconduct in the trading of shares by newly listed companies, many local brokers believed that the colonial government unfairly targeted small players such as themselves.

There are plenty of sharks in Hong Kong, but it's about time they started catching a few big fish instead of the little ones," said one local trader who asked not to be identified, referring to the widespread belief that many of Hong Kong's biggest corporate names regularly manipulate stock trading.

While fund managers from larger, blue-chip firms might be reluctant to ride in Mr. Chim's gold limo, they may find themselves allied with him in a fight against another Securities and Futures Commission campaign: a crackdown on the payment of cash rebates and "soft dollar" commissions.

A paper published last week by the SFC indicated it wants to ultimately ban cash rebates paid by brokers to fund managers in return for business placed with them. The SFC also called for tighter regulation of soft dollar commissions, through which brokers provide goods or services to fund a response to the SFC proposals. "But we feel the outright banning of rebates would disadvantage Hong Kong as a global as well as regional financial center."

decide whose money to accept as investment capital in his nascent Mandarin-language China Entertainment Television

"I only need $50 million, but about $100 million wants to come in," said Mr. Chua, a producer of game and variety shows, corporate videos, and adult entertainment telephone services and programs. "I must have the right partners, ones that bring more than just money to the deal."

Mr. Chua plans to launch three channels for distribution throughout Taiwan and China, where cable television networks which now may serve up to 20 million households. The first, a food, entertainment and lifestyle channel — "very safe: no sex; no violence; no news" — should be ready in 1995.

After Kim, North Korea's Next Step

By Steven Brull

Control of the Contro

ional Flerald Tribune SEOUL - Whoever emerges as North Korea's leader after the death of Kim Il Sung will be forced by economic necessity to speed up the Communist country's tentative steps toward integration with the outside world.

Yet while greater trade and investment will help the tattered economy to plod on for a few more years, nothing short of a full-blown economic opening can reverse the long-term decline of the Stalinist state's economy - an option ruled out, however, because it would probably undermine the regime, analysts said Sunday.
Instead, the betting is that Kim Jong
II, Kim II Sung's son, will become North Korea's leader and pursue a modestly accelerated program of economic reforms once he consolidates his grip on power over the next several months. Kim Jong Il has been a key player in the North's hesitant openings to the outside world, a process modeled after China's open-door policies begun in the late 1970s, but North Korea's have been far less ambitious and effective. In contrast to China's roaring economy, North Korea's gross national product dropped 20 per-cent from 1989 to 1993 and the economy is beset with shortages of food, energy, tute. "If Kim Jong II feels secure, he'll try to advance the open-door policies, but I doubt he can dissociate himself completely from what his father achieved."

Even if North Korea wished to open up more aggressively, it's unlikely it could match Beijing's success in grafting market economics onto a state-planned system. Beijing has benefited enormously from Hong Kong and the special economic zones along the coast. The closest Pyong-yang comes is a community of North Koreans living across the border in China.

"He will try to follow the Chinese way of economie reform, but it might not work as well," said Masashi Nishihara, director of research at Japan's National Institute for Defense Studies in Tokyo. 'So he will have to go very slowly in opening up the economy and may lose egitimacy in the process."

Despite the pitfalls and potential for political collapse, some businessmen in Seoul viewed the death of the 82-yearold Kim as a positive catalyst for North Korea's economic policies and the South's economic development.

Greater openness to foreign capital and technology would slow the pace of foreign exchange and clothing.

"He will have to prove his legitimacy, but he's also a part of the Kim II Sung the North's economic decline and minimize the eventual cost of reunification with the South—estimated at more than legacy," said Chun Hong Tack, research fellow at the Korea Development Instiopen up a new source of cheap workers for South Korean companies, which have lost cost-competitiveness in laborintensive industries.

The business community is very cager to go," said Lee Young Sun, professor of economics at Yonsei University. "They are already calculating their profits."

South Korea's chaebol, or conglomerates, have long had plans to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in North Korea. None of their proposed projects is in operation, however, because of Pyongyang's suspected nuclear development program.

But companies, spurred by the summit meeting of North and South Korean leaders, planned for later this month but canceled, have been stepping up their preparation. Lucky-Goldstar, for instance, plans first to invest in light and medium-size industries such as textiles and toys; later, it will move into heavy industries such as cement, chemicals and electric power generation.

"We're all seeking labor that's cheaper than it is in Vietnam or China but much more skilled and diligent and which speaks Korean," said Kim Do Kyoung, research director at Lucky-Goldstar's economic research institute. "This will allow South Korea to be competitive for a longer time, even against Japan."

China's 'Mobile' War Cry

New Phone Firm To Be Launched

Bloomberg Business News BELJING — In an attempt to break the dominance held by foreign companies in China's booming mobile phone and pager markets, eight Chinese concerns will join forces to form a competing entity, the official China Daily reported Sunday.

Jinfeng Telecommunications Co., to be launched in Beijing in August, will try to cut into the phone handset market leadership of U.S.-based Motorola Inc. and into the switching equipment strength of Sweden's Ericsson AB, the paper said.

Explosive growth has already made China's mobile telecommunications network the world's third-largest behind the United States and Japan.

The enterprises forming the new company include giant consumer electronics firm Changhong Electronics Co., Changling Electronics Co., Beijing Huaxun Telecommunications Corp. and Beijing Catch Telecommunications Corp.

China has thrown down an ultimatum in its bid to rejoin GATT, setting this month's GATT meeting in Geneva as the deadline for the world trade body to accept its package of concessions, the China Daily Business Weekly said Sunday, Agence France-Presse reported from Beijing.

Frankfurt market was on the way back after sharp losses in June, when the DAX fell 5 percent. The bank expects to see the DAX at 2,350 in six months, primarily because of improved business earnings. Bank issues were mixed. Dresdner Bank lost 0.50 Deutsche marks to end at 378.50, but Commerzbank gained 3.50 to 331.50 and Deutsche Bank moved ahead 10 to 714.

Carmakers were strong, with VW up 2.50 to 473 and BMW up 15 to 799.

Hong Kong

Stocks fell to their lowest point in two months in Hong Kong, as continued uncertainty over U.S. interest rates and currency values kept investors on the sidelines.

The merchant bank Schroders, which said it was raising its 42.5 percent stake in U.S. investment bank Wertheim Schroder to 85 percent, rose 42 pence to 1,180.

Eurotunnel rose 9 pence to 270, after falling from gams car-lier in the week. The result of its rights issue, published on Thursday, showed it was 95.1 percent taken up.

Paris .

The Paris Bourse ended in an optimistic mood, with the CAC-40 index Friday up 2.5 percent at 1,920.78 points. But that was still 19 percent down from its Feb. 2 record high of 831 year. 2,360.98 points, as trading remained thin at an estimated 1.7 villion francs

The market remains in the bear mode into which it slamped after the U.S. decision to raise short-term rates in February. The resulting jitters on bond markets dragged European stock exchanges mto their slipstream, as rates crept up in Germany and France.

Of leading issues, Eurotunne slipped 40 centimes to 22.55 francs: Pechincy International was down 2.90 francs at 146.

ployment reported for June might have overstated the growth by as many as 100,000 jobs. But analysts said the figures, coupled with upward revisions in the number of jobs created in April and May, were consistent with an economy showing momentum.

In order to slow growth to a more sustainable pace, and thus keep inflation in check, analysts said the Federal Reserve Board would probably push up shortterm interest rates for the fifth time this year.

The numbers were undeniably strong," said David H. Resler, chief economist at Nomura Securities International. Even though the employment data and anything else that happened in June was too close to previous Fed moves to have had any impact, I don't think the markets will give the Fed the luxury of waiting much longer."
The Fed made its last move was produced by mutual funds. "This year, we're running at a rate of closer to 45,000," said Ms. Hooper in a recent interview. "And 45 percent of the material sent in has to be revised" before it gets the NASD blessing to be printed or put on

When a fund ad gets bounced by Ms. Hooper's staff, it can be for any number of reasons, the most innocent of which can be some arcane technical violation of Securities and Exchange Commission rules that can be easily corrected. But fund companies also try to get away with disclosing" the risks in ways that have no impact, said Ms. Hooper.

As it turns out, fund compa nies quickly inform the NASD when they see an ad that raises

Tackling the 'Waste' of Unemployment

International Herald Tribune
NAPLES — There were few surprises in the final communique issued at the end of the summit meeting of the Group of Seven industrialized nations, but leaders made good on the promise made at the G-7 jobs conference in Detroit last March to announce special measures aimed at reducing unemployment.

While noting that economic recovery is under way, with inflation at the lowest levels in over three decades, the statement pointed out that it was still "an unacceptable waste" for over 24 million people to be unemployed in G-7 countries alone.

Apart from measures aimed at maintaming low-inflation growth, the communique commits G-7 members to tackling unemployment through the following structural reforms:

• Increasing investment in better basic education and on-the-job training. Reducing rigidities in the labor market that add to employer costs or deter as trade and the environment, and trade job creation, and eliminating excessive and labor standards. regulations.

· Promoting the spread of new, jobcreating technologies, including the development of an integrated worldwide information infrastructure.

 Promoting job creation in areas where new needs exist, such as environmental protection. On trade, the G-7 members pledged to seek the ratification of the Uruguay Round accord of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade this year so that GATT's successor, the World Trade Organization, can be established by Janu-

The G-7 also encouraged the study of new international trade issues by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, especially the search for rules that would remove obstacles to foreign direct investment. It also supported study by the WTO of issues such

The communiqué called on the World Bank to strengthen efforts to reinforce private capital flows to the world's poorest countries, and asked the Paris Club of industrialized creditor nations to press ahead with debt write-offs for them. In the most desperate cases, these write-offs could amount to more than half the existing debt, U.S. officials said.

The G-7 expressed alarm at the growth of organized transnational crime, including money laundering, and promised to strengthen international cooperation to address the problem.

Finally, it was agreed that the G-7 summit next year in Halifax, Nova Scotia, should focus on ways to sustain economic growth in the 21st century, and on adapting multilateral institutions and building new ones to reflect the changing structure of the world economy.

 His remarks on the dollar Friday, which effectively ruled out an immediate dollar support package, sent the U.S. cur-

On Saturday, he was forced to withdraw a proposal that G-7 countries begin a one-year review of new ways to reduce trade barriers after President François Mitterrand of France vetoed the idea on the grounds that it could damage efforts to ratify the recently signed Uruguay Round accord of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Robert Rubin, Mr. Clinton's assistant for economic policy, said in an interview that "we deferred to the French view because ratifying the GATT agreement is our highest priori-Mr. Bentsen tried to make light of the setback on Sunday by saying, "You're not gonna win them all."

Other results of the talks included an agreement among G-7 members to pledge a total of $200 million in new grants to help Ukraine to pay for the shutting down and cleaning up of two dangerous nuclear reactors still operating at the Chernobyl plant. This is in addition to $600 million of loans and grants pledged by the European Union at its recent summit in Corfu, Greece, Senior U.S. and European officials said the total amount expected to be committed for the Chernobyl shutdown and to help complete three safer nuclear reactors would be close to $1.5 billion. The money is to come from government grants and loans as well as from the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

The meeting also held out the prospect of more than $4 billion of World Bank and IMF funds for Ukraine over the next two years, providing the government there pursues serious economic reforms.

DOLLAR: With the G-7 Looking Complacent, Is There a Crisis Brewing?

lar's decline. The current situation in the foreign-exchange market is unusual because speculators are not prominent. But a dash of speculative excess now, even if it means a further temporary setback for the dollar, might clearly be wel-come to officials. Speculators are notoriously fickle and often easily frightened into reversing positions, buying what they had just sold and thereby capable of setting off a bandwagon in the direction intended by the intervention that caused the scare.

So the question emerges, if there's relatively little speculation, are the laconic comments about the dollar emanating from the leaders of the world's seven richest industrial democracies at their summit meeting in Naples really aimed at enticing speculators to get active so that the next round of intervention can be successful? .

"It's a very seductive thesis," says George Magnus at S.G. Warburg in London. "The situation is ripe for such a trap."
Neil MacKinnon at Citibank in London concurs, although both analysts doubt it would be a successful ploy.

Mr. MacKinnon insists that economie fundamentals are working against the dollar. "I'm not persuaded that intervention coupled with changes in shortterm interest rates can sustainably reverse the dollar's downtrend," be says, noting that previous increases in U.S. interest rates and declines in German levels have had no impact on exchange rates.

Mr. Magnus reads the public comments preceding and dur-mg the summit meeting as indicating that "no one is willing to take the measures necessary to arrest the dollar's fall or to push it up." He sees no reason to mand there will be for 10-year expect an imminent change in paper...

Iran Airline Buys Airbuses

TEHRAN - The private Iranian string Safiran has signed a contract in Paris to buy three used A-360-B4 Airbuses for more than $100 million, the newspaper Risala at reported.

Risals at quoted Mohammed Baqer, the general manager, as saying that Safiran had been negotiating the purchase for a year with Aerospatiale, one of the four partners in Airbus Industrie. It said no bank guarantee had been required for the deal, signed after last week's agreement between France and Iran rescheduling debt that some discounts are $200 million. debt that some diplomats put at $300 million.

Payments for the Airbuses will be stretched over eight years, Mr. Bager was quoted as saying. The contract covers equipment and spare parts. The planes, which can carry 300 passengers, were made in 1983 but had relatively low flight hours, he said.

Safiran, formed four years ago as a charter transport airline, will use them domestically and on regional routes to such destinations as Middle Eastern and Central Asian countries.

Since he won the rainbowstriped jersey of the world champion in the professionals' road race in Oslo last summer, Armstrong has had problems winning again in Europe. Everybody knows who he is now, he says accurately, and nobody will let him make an unaccompanied attack in a race.

"This's always going to attract attention," the 22-year-old American rider for Motorola said Sunday morning, referring to his jersey. It travels in a crowd, and so Armstrong did again in the Tour de France's eighth of 21 stages, a 218.5-kilometer (135.7-mile) slog from Poitiers to Trelissac in the Périgord region of southwestern

His goals, he said, are to win a stage and "show some improvement in the time trials and the climbs."

The climbs will have to be in the Pyrenees, which start Thursday. "The last week, in the Alps?" Armstrong said. "I'm pretty sure I'm not going to do it." He and Motorola team officials also decided last year that, at his age, he was not yet ready for too many demanding mountains and he dropped out soon after they began.

As for time trials, he would see Monday whether he is improving. The 64-kilometer race against the clock is, Armstrong said, "a little bit long for me. I've never done a time trial that when he gave them reason to Valentin made the 10th unas-

Ernie Padgett, Glenn Wright, Jimmy Cooney, Johnny Neun, Ron Hansen and Mickey Morandini as the only players to record three outs on a single play, Valentin did not even realize he was on the verge of something special.

With Scattle runners moving from first and second base in the top of the sixth. Valentin went to one knee to snare Marc Newfield's liner.

He stepped on second to dou-

NBA and Players Given Deadline By U.S. Judge

The Associated Press NEW YORK -- Judge Kevin Duffy of the U.S. District Court has given the National Basketball Association and its players until 10 A.M. Tuesday to work out details on a salary cap, free agency and the draft.

If not, the case will go to trial for one day only and Duffy will decide on a new system - one that neither side might like. The judge said the two sides were using the court as a bargaining chip. Similar suits were filed in 1976, 1983 and 1988. The major issue appears to be the salary cap.

Glenn Rohinson, chosen first in the draft by the Milwankee Rucks, has made no secret of wanting to be the first NBA player to get a $100 million con-

WORLD CUP WRAP-UP

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches There were 118 goals scored in the first 44 match of World Cup '94 - an average of 2.68 per - but exactly how were those goals scored?

Fifty-five came off right-footed shots, 26 off left-footed shots, 18 were scored on headers and 13 on penalty kicks. Another three were scored on direct free kicks, and the last three were own Russia's Oleg Salenko was the top goal-scorer, with six, four on right-footed shots and two on penalties.

The most well-rounded striker was Germany's Jurgen Klinsmann, who scored two with his right-loot, two with his left and one with his head. The top aerial threat was Sweden's Martin Dahlin, who had used his head on three of his four goals. Because of the time difference, two of Italy's games in prime time in Rome at 10 P.M., and the other three, including Saturday's quarterfinal against Spain, in early evening when shops are yet in a country of 57 million, each of Italy's first four matches drew a television audience of between 22.5 million and 25 million viewers.

That represents up to 85 percent of the TV sets in the country.

However, five prime-time Italian appearances in the Italia 90 Cup drew bigger audiences. The most-watched game in Italian history came that year in the penalty-kick loss to Argentina, which stracted nearly 30 million viewers and 87 percent of people watching television.

In Ireland, its team's matches produced the highest television ratings in the nation's sports history, RTE, the Irish television network,

According to one telephone poll, 93 percent of all viewers watched Ireland's opening game against Italy. The percentage was even higher when Ireland played the Netherlands in the second round, with the Irish Times reporting that the game was seen by "virtually the whole population."

• Henry Winter of the Independent of London reminds readers that American's first soccer league was founded in 1921, but foundered in the Depression, ending some colorful club names: the Providence Clamdiggers, Bethlehem Steel, J&P Coats of Pawtucket, Brooklyn Wanderers, Boston Wonder Workers and Indiana Flooring of New York.

• Javier Clemente, Spain's blunt, chain-smoking coach, has been fouding with Spanish media-since the team arrived in Chicago on June 10. On Friday he announced, "I don't care what the media says. But if you know so much, you

He later confronted a Spanish reporter who had compared Clemente to a dictator.

"You should never say that about somebody from Spain! Or somebody from Italy!" he said.
"Italy had Mussolini, we had Franco, those are bad memories. Please, I cannot be a dictator." • The Financial Times of London quoted a report from the Albania newspaper, Koha Jone (Our Time), that a man short of gambling cash lost his wife after staking her on the outcome of a World Cap game.

The gambler was so sure Argentina would beat Bulgaria in their first-round match that he bet his wife. Bulgaria won, 2-0. The wife disappeared with the winner, and the loser was left to complain to the police.

FIFA said it's campaign to put more emphasis on offense had produced an unexpected benefit: Two extra games. Joseph Blatter, FIFA's general secretary, said the ball was in play an average of 61 minutes, 37 seconds during the first 44 games, or about six minutes more per game than in the last World Doing some quick math and even quicker spin-doctoring, Blatter declared: "That's like offering the fans two more games."

Actually, three, if Blatter redoes his math for the 90-minute contests. · Placido Domingo's addition came out no

At Italy's match against Spain Luciano Pavar-otti was rooting for Italy, while Domingo and José Carreras were rooting for Spain.

The three tenors, who will reunite next Saturday for a concert at Dodger Stadium on the eve of the final, discussed the possibility of a Spain-Italy game when they gathered in New York three months ago. ..

"Since we are two against one, perhaps Spain will beat Italy 2-1," Domingo said.

Belgium filed a "very polite letter" criticizing a referee's blown call that might have helped ninate the team from the second round. The Beigians did not submit a formal protest or complaint over the actions of referee Kurt Roethlisberger in a 3-2 loss to Germany last Saturday, said Joseph Blatter, secretary general Roethlisberger acknowledged a mistake in failing to call a foul in the 70th minute of the game when Belgium's Josip Weber was tripped in the penalty box. A foul at that spot would have resulted in a penalty kick for Belgium.

"We received a very polite letter from Belgium, saying they were sad to have the tournament end for them in such a sad situation," Blatter said.

FIFA publicly criticized Roethsliberger and another referee, Pierluigi Paretto, for missing key calls in the second round and dropped them from can make out the lineup. Why in the hell am I the list of officials for the quarterfinals onward. (LAT, Reuters, AP)

NAPLES - Italians celebrated wildly Saturday after their team's 2-1 victory over Spain carried them into the World Cup semifinals, and even the leaders from the Group of Seven industrialized countries assembled here for a summit acknowl-edged their interest in the tournament. Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi took time out from the summit to declare "I believe in the new Italian miracle," just as Dino Baggio put Italy ahead in the 26th minute.

President François Mitterrand, of France, admitted that affairs of state could not compete with soccer. He offered to cut short a news conference that was under way when the match started.

"It would free you, and me too," he said. Warren M. Christopher, the U.S. secretary of state, apologized for keeping re-porters from watching the game. He said he felt guilty holding a news conference while the game was being shown live on television.

Near-hysterical celebrations in Naples put police and troops guarding the G7 leaders on alert as 200 jubilant fans on motor scooters surged toward security cordons near the 18th century Royal Palace. Police turned them back.

At the palace, hundreds of staff, journal-ists and officials took a break from the summit to watch the game.

Japanese security guards protecting Yohei Kono, the deputy prime minister, visi-bly visibly flinched during a news conference when the roar went up at the palace to celebrate Dino Baggio's goal.

Throw-Ins Will Get the Boot In 3 Leagues Next Season

DALLAS — Three European leagues will experiment with kick-ins instead of throw-ins next season, said Sepp Blatter, the general secretary of FIFA, soccer's governing body.

Blatter said the Belgian and Hungarian second divisions and an English semi-professional league would test the kick-ins and said he expected the change to be written into the laws of the game within two years. "I am sure that in two years the kick-in will replace the throw-in in the laws of the game and then we will have an even faster game than we have now," Blatter said.

The kick-in, used in soccer in the 1860s and 1870s, was replaced by the throw-in in Blatter said the kick-in also would return another skill element to the game. There will be more technique than we have now, because by kicking the ball in it is easier to control it."

FIFA tested the kick-in during last year's World Youth Cup in Australia.
Blatter also said that sudden-death goals would be introduced at the next World Cup finals with the first team scoring in extra time taking victory.

This Italian Road Show Is Beginning to Look at Lot Like 1982's

PALO ALTO — No one ever said sports were fair. Don't tell me that you cannot remember moments on the school playground when - no matter how hard you tried, how much you hoped — you were made green with envy hy the boy who seemed to be blessed with everything.

You know the one I mean. He could do with his eyes closed what you could pracover and Rob Hughes never suc-ceed at. He bad skill, grace, timing. Especially timing. In games, it decides all.

We saw the adult version of that blessing, and that playground envy, in Foxboro Stadium outside Boston on Saturday.

Eight minutes from the final whistle, Spain's Julio Salinas bad the opportunity to finish off Italy. The man and the ball were there, with the goal just in front of him, but Salinas, taut of nerve, could not

Two minutes from the end of the match, from an almost identical position, Roberto Baggio did score, imperiously, for Italy. For the second match running, Baggio had snatched victory from the jaws of defeat; his timing was that of the playground gods.

How jealousy must have settled on Salinas. He is a paid predator — in the eyes of his national team's coach the most dependable finisher in all of Spain. Sali-nas also is a deceptive fellow. He plays for the richest Spanish club, but plays mostly as a reserve. He is as willing as the day is long; a tall, lean, bonest striver who never

Those qualities are trusted implicitly by Javier Clemente, the Spanish team's coach. They are hardly recognized at all hy Johan Cruyff, the Barcelona coach who has made two foreign, exotic World Cup strikers, Hristo Stoichkov and Romário, his first choices.

So Salinas is obliged to put everything into his national team calling. He got Spain to this World Cup, scoring seven goals in seven qualifying appearances.

His methods are a triumph for perseverance. Salinas might look as if staying upright is a major act of control, a strug-gle against poor coordination, but he has the courage and the timing to get there. Up to a point. On Saturday, unusually, he had come on late, as a second-half substitute. By then Spain seemed to be capitalizing on the unfairness of the World Cup scheduling that had granted the team three days more rest than it had given Italy.

When the humidity exceeds 100 per-cent, when every stride seems to be in the quicksands of fatigue, those extra days ought to count. And they seemed to have, for by the time Salinas took the field Spain undoubtedly had the physical and emotional edge.

With Italy fading fast, it fell to Salinas to put everyone out of their misery. Italy's coach, Arrigo Sacchi, was twitching on the sideline; Spain's Clemente had lit a cigarette; all eyes were on Salinas.

Italy's defense fell apart before Salinas. Goalkeeper Gianluca Pagliuca came slowly, reluctantly off his line. Now, Julio, hit it

There was a split second, an iota of time between thought and execution. Do it, Julio, be a hero! Pressure gripped the mo-ment. Finally, he shot. Too late, far too late - Pagliuca blocked the shot, instinctively, with his right leg.

I think we sensed then that Italy would be reprieved. We probably knew who would turn the screw. Roberto Baggio. Just where he had been this last half hour no one, least of all his Italian colleagues, seemed to know.

Nicola Berti, a midfielder playing despite injury, lobbed the ball hopefully forward. Giuseppe Signori, a front-runner fighting insecurity, flicked it on, quickly, intuitively, trusting that No. 10 would be lurking in the penalty area.

He was Now it was Baggio versus Andoni Zubizarreta, forward versus goalkeeper, in virtually the exact spot from where Salinas had failed.

Baggio is not Salinas. His clock seems to work in fits and starts, to have an alarm bell that wakes him to inspiration. He didn't hesitate. With a body swerve a mat-ador would kill for, Baggio dodged the goalkeeper with a sweep to the right and he could clearly see the whites of the goal-

Calmly, he balanced himself. He could see a defender on the goal line, knew the shot would have to be swift, powerful, precise. No problem: From an acute angle, he drove the ball between Abelardo Fernandez and the near post.

Did Baggio even knew the sweet irony of it? Abelardo had tried, the first opportunity early in the game, to put a stop to Baggio's match-winning tendency.

The Spanish defender had lunged at him, using the boot on his foot to pass over the ball and crash down on Baggio's shin. It is an evil trick, despised in the game, and one that should have brought out the red card and not merely the yellow that was shown to Abelardo.

Briefly, Baggio was battered. He was carried off on a stretcher, and those who accuse this Italian savior of timidity may well have assumed his match was over.

"Baggio is simply no good," one Rome-based journalist had written a week earli-er. "He has bags of skill and talent, but when the pressure is on, he disappears. If Sacchi is a man of courage and character, he will now drop Baggio, notwithstanding the player's status of national sporting

That and many other Italian editorials would bave had Baggio out before the match against Nigeria — which he saved with a goal in the final minute and won with a penalty in extra time.

When, after that, the same experts who had referred to him as "the author of a sporting betrayal without precedent sporting betrayal without precedent's sought to praise him, Baggio had words as sharp as his finish: "I am nobody's savior. I'm the same as I was yesterday morning. The team always had commitment and the will to win. We've proved we are not the wings some people in the press think we Either Baggio had gotten twice lucky, or he had indeed proven those things. Heaven help us. The Italians, turning traumatic neurosis to triumph in the nick of time, might actually win this tournament.

The pattern is reminiscent of 1982, when The pattern is reminiscent of 1982, when the Italian team began dreadfully, found a talisman in Paolo Rossi, and proved all of us rotten forecasters by winning the cup. It is a strange, indefinable thing, but Italy's World Cup history always teases us with boredom, always trawls through self-doubt, always comes up with a thin man lestined to score most or all of the goals.

Baggio Follows His Script, Italy Advances to Semifinals

By Ian Thomsen

FOXBORO, Massachusetts - The final two minutes became Roberto Baggio's encore. It happens all the time in theaters, choreographed and rehearsed behind the curtains, but the 54,605 who paid their way in here would not dare have imagined the star confirming stardom in his country's biggest game.

Yet Baggio acts now with the audscity of someone whose heroics have been written out for him; he's the calmest, surest striker this side of Romário, and of course he has final editorial control. So he rode out the negatives until it was time to seize Italy's 2-1 victory over Spain in the Seth minute of their World Cup quarterfinal Saturday, when Roberto Donadoni's vertical ball ricocheted off of Giuseppe Signori — his was a desperate knee-high punch of a pass — and out wide to Baggio, whose own recent play is driving him toward the highest expectations.

The goal he scored was one of a champion," said Arrigo Sacchi, or so Italy's manager hopes.

An Achilles' tendon injury has slowed Baggio, and his tinkering manager has frustrated him as much as any trip-tackling defender. Following Sacchi's decision to remove Baggio early in their second game, the Italians had won a couple of matches short-banded to get this far. They wouldn't have returned for the quarterfinal if not for Baggio's tying goal in the 89th minute here last week against Nigeria, which allowed him to then create and convert the winning penalty in extra time. But that was just the prolog.

The Nigerian miracle had inspired not confidence but just four more changes in the lineup. If Sacchi were a painter be would never finish a painting, It is not entirely his fault. His fans who constantly say that Sacchi ought to be replaced can cite example after example of his impatience. In order to live up to their expectations, Sacchi makes more and more changes. Nobody sees the irony in this. The job is impossible.

One of his new starters in midfield, Dino Baggio, sliced in a wicked opening goal from beyond the box in the 26th minute. It was a rare, er Miguel Angel Nadal and midfielder Luis Enrique were sent forward, Fernando Hierro and Julio Salinas were hrought in to run and, in the 59th minute, a dazzling huild-up was finished hy José Luis Caminero, deflected by the foot of exhausted defender Antonio Benarrivo.

But their advantages in work and effort turned against the Spaniards as they almost always do in this neighborhood rivalry. Italy was looking forward to its seventh World Cup semifinal on Wednesday against either Germany or Bulgaria, while Spain has failed to last drop of energy you have." Roberto Baggio survive three quarterfinals. It almost always loses said.

to Italy in meaningful (non-Olympic) interna-tionals; the Spanish league is probably second only to Italy's, and just two months ago AC Milan swept away favored Barcelona, 4-0, in the European Champions Cup final. Five of those Milanese went up against seven emharrassed Barcelonans on Saturday, including Spain's most-capped player, Andoni Zubizarreta, the goalkeeper who was out the door and headed for Valencia after his display in Athens.

A brawl almost resulted (during the final injury time, aptly) when the elbow of Milan's Mauro Tassotti broke Luis Enrique's nose. The two had to be separated as teammates rushed in, and Enrique refused to board his referee-ordered stretcher. Led at last to the sideline, his trainer kept him still by sitting on top of him — and had to shove Tassotti aside as the Italian made another run at Enrique when the game was over. "I believe the play should have been whistled," said Javier Clemente, the Spanish coach. His team really should have gone ahead in the 83d minute when Salinas was alone with Gianluca Pagliuca. Pagliuca is the goalkeeper who unwarily got Italy going by getting himself ejected in the second game. He was given his joh ahead of his replacement for 2½ games, Luca Marchegiani, and in the crucial moment he made the great play of allowing Salinas to dribble blindly into his ankle.

"There are so many people I would like to congratulate for this victory, but most of all I would like to congratulate myself," said Pagliuca with a broad smile. "My being expelled, and then being able to come back and play a good game, deserves my praise."

Roberto Baggio had practically been forgotten when, two minutes before the closing credits, a door was kicked open and there he was - in the right side of the box with only the keeper in his way. Zubizarreta, having already lost his Barce-lona career to these Italians, twitched and dove as if trying to tackle a cat. His forcarms thudded together: Nothing. But he rolled to see that he had forced the ball out to a difficult angle, giving time for his teameven-handed lead for Italy, and wouldn't last. The mate Abelardo to race in and cover. We are air was as humid and foggy as a bathroom's during talking of a second's fraction. The ball seemed to a hot shower, and the Spaniards had rested for six inhale and squeeze itself in between the right days. The second half belonged to them as sweep-post and Abelardo's stomping foot. Before the curtain could jerk, Baggio was blowing a kiss to the crowd. So the Spaniards, who, with Sweden, had scored the most goals (9) in the first four games, now go home earlier than they should. At the least, they should have gone into extra time and worn out Italy then. But the Italians have earned confidence in someone who may prove to be more valuable than all of Brazil's style or Germany's efficiency.

Spain's goalkeeper, Andoni Zubizarreta, stretched a leg - and failed in the attempt - as the match-winning goal was kicked in by Roberto Baggio.

Pagliuca Storms Back for Italy After Suspension

FOXBORO, Massachusetts - A nightmare is over for Gianluca Paglinca. Paghuca had a difficult time sitting through a two-game suspension, watching his friend and backup play goal for linear missed matches against Mexico Spain in the quarterfinals.

Paglinca's outstanding performance after serving his suspension helped Italy to a 2-1 victory and into the World Cup semifinals. It also healed the bruised morale of the Italian goalic.

"I'm so happy for the contribution given to the team. I badly needed a good game," said Pagliuca, 27. "You can't imagine my sufferings in the last two weeks, following my ejection. And the

Branco Scores a Point Against Critics

The Associated Press

DALLAS --- Brazil's "old man" came through, in style and in the clutch.

As Branco left the field in the final minute of Brazil's dramatic, 3-2, win over the Netherlands in a World Cup quarterfinal game Saturday, fans in the Cotton Bowl stood and applauded. The defender not only created the play that resulted in the winning goal, but scored it on a booming left-footed free kick "I looked at the scoreboard and I saw there were 10 minutes left," he said after the game. "I bad to try something, and I figured now was the time."

His shot skirted the end of the wall and nicked the post on its way into the right

It was vintage Branco — he had been scoring like that through a long career that includes two previous World Cups. But this one had a special significance.

"I call it my 'put up or shut up' goal," he said. "This shuts the mouths of a lot of people who said I was was through, that I didn't belong on the team." It's been a long road back for the 30-year-old defender. Injuries late in the season and at training camp had cost him his starting berth. Leo-nardo, his replacement, was three years younger and a lot more spry. Many Brazilians felt Branco was too old to run both ends of the field as a lateral defender, one of soccer's most grueling

Suddenly, Leonardo was gone, out for the Cup with a four-game suspension for elbowing the U.S. midfielder Tab Ramos. Branco was back. But was he ready? The Dutch team would provide the answer. Branco would cover Marc Overmars, a quick and dangerous attacker.

"It's funny, but I wasn't in the least worried about marking him, although he's one of the team's best players. And I don't think he had much of an influence on the game," Branco said. Branco shut down Overmars, and the Dutch team didn't create much of anything on his side. The two goals, resulting from a corner kick and a throw-in, started on the right side.

But the criticism he took still rankles. "Certain people ran an orchestrated campaign against me," he said. "But my teammates and the medical staff stood by me, and God gave me this chance."

Branco, right, shut down the quick and dangerous forward Marc Overmars before heating the Dutch with his free kick.

The Spanish Lament: An Opportunity Missed

FOXBORO, Massachusetts - Depression hung over the Spanish camp as it dawned on them just how close they had

"This was a fabulous opportunity," said Jon Andoni Goikoetxea, a midfielder for Spain. "I think it will be a long time before we get another one like it." After dominating most of the Saturday's World Cup quarterfinal, Spain learned how painful a missed opportunity could be as Italy struck late to hand the Spaniards a 2-1 loss. Júlio Salinas, at forward, and Andoni Zuhizarreta, in goal, shouldered the bulk of critics' blame for the loss, and Salinas admitted he felt luck had deserted him.

the hall bouncing all I could do was hit it Clemente said with my leg," he said, referring to a scoring opportunity with just seven minutes to

But Javier Clemente, Spain's coach, refused to place blame for the loss.

"It would not be fair. We have to be comprehensive when people make mistakes," Clemente said. "I still don't understand it. Salinas doesn't normally miss sitters like that but today he was unlucky."

Luck bypassed the Spaniards again in the final seconds, when forward Luis Enrique Martinez was set to intercept a lobbing pass that could have produced a second equalizer, but was knocked in the face and grounded by Mauro Tassotti.

"Luis Enrique had his nose broken. I think it should have been a clear penalty The goalkeeper came out well hut with hut the referee decided to ignore it totally,

But if the referee made errors, so too did Spain, and none greater than in allowing Roberto Baggio's goal.
"In football there's always mistakes.

That second goal was genuinely a superb counterattack which caught us by surprise with only four men in the back," Clemente said. "I agree it was very lamentable." José Luis Pérez Caminero, who scored Spain's only goal in the 59th minute, said "I don't know what went wrong in the midfield, but they told us that Baggio was offside, maybe it was that." José Maria Bakero saw it as more a lack of decisiveness on Spain's part. "There's no room for lamenting," he said. "We had clear opportunities we couldn't exploit, more than the Italians.

The difference is with Italy if you don't hammer it home, they will."

It's Bang-Bang Bulgaria, Then Bye-Bye to Old Germany, 2-1

lordan Letchkov, rear, and Germany's Thomas Hässler watch the Bulgarian's header go goalward in the 79th minute.

the beautiful teammates were ecstatic, the Germans stumed.

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey -Offered little more than a puncher's chance, the Bulgarian goals came from down around the ankles and toppled everything the world takes for granted in soccer. In the 76th minute, Hristo Stoitchkov's left hook popped the net from over the top; three minutes later came the knockout blow, delivered with every inch of Iordan Letchkov's airborne body.

For the first time since 1982, Germany will miss a World Cup final. The three-time champion was removed from its quarterfinal, 2-1, on Sunday by Bulgaria, which less than three weeks ago had never won a World Cup match. If not for the conscientionsness of a forgotten referee last November in Paris, the Bulgarians would not have carned a place among the final 24 teams here — a place that was hardly regarded.

Its upset of France in the final moments of injury time eight months ago led to its first-round upset of Argentina — aided by the suspension hours earlier of Diego Maradona; which was then followed by an unlikely second-round shootout against Mexico that was won almost singlehan-dedly by Borislav Mihaylov, the unheralded French second-division goalkeeper. Over the final 15 minutes Sunday, he found himself preserving what might be the most surprising victory since 1954, when Hungary was upset for the first of three West Germany's three World Cup

The Germans, unified for the first time since 1938 by the same forces that have allowed the Bulgarians to gain club experience in the west, had won nine of their previous 10 World Cup quarterfinals, and they were on their way to a semifinal here against Italy when the Colombian referee, José Joaquin Torres Cadena, penalized Letchkov for tripping Jürgen Klinsmann after the two had contested a high bounce

Twice more Hässler would cross dangerously to Andreas Möller, the first deflected in the 48th minute. Lothar Matthaus, the German captain who tied a record with his 21st World Cup appearance Sunday, was able to beat Mihaylov to the right corner as the Mexicans had failed to do, and Germany held a 1-0 lead.

Yet Matthaus, for all of his strengths, embodied the German weaknesses as well. Age had forced him backward from midfielder to sweeper, and a gash in his right foot had sidelined him from the latter half of the team's second-round victory a weekend ago. In the eighth minute, the whole world gasped at the sight of him pivoting numbly on that foot to mis-clear a ball directly to Nasko Sirakov in the German Winking and nodding to each other, the Bulgarians smelled weakness and within four minutes they were attacking. A dead ball quickly taken exploited the German absentmindedness as Sirakov went deep to knock a short cross off the hands of goalkeeper Bodo Ilgner. It was gathered up by Letchkov, whose pass into the disarray found Stoitchkov alone for just a moment, just long enough for him to cross to the charging Krassimir Balakov for what should have been the opening goal. It banged clear off the left post.

For 20 minutes the Germans were as passive as sharpshooters, looking for space while their naive, hungrier opponents sought to create it. Slowly the champion warmed to that challenge, as a cross from Thomas Hässler and the challenge of the control of the challenge of the challe the eight German goals — came off the head of Jürgen Klinsmann, horizontal, six paces from Stoitchkov. Klinsmann hung there like a rifle barrel, his shot knocking Mihaylov backward —though the Bulgarian had the wherewithal to catch the ricochet off his chest without falling into goal by Trifon Ivanov in the 33d minute, the second coming just one minute before the Bulgarian equalizer - and it's the second which Germany will remember: A ball laid back perfectly and whalloped, with as much boom as 18-wheel truck running over the ball, off the left post. Rudi Völler put in the rebound, but his partner, Klinsmann, had been ruled offsides. The Germans could have led by 2-0.

Nonetheless, they appeared to be as-suming control as they always do, forcing their ways on a smaller, less certain oppo-nent. Romania had lost its breakaway zeal as Stoitchkov, who mostly had been si-lenced by his shadowing defender. Jürgen Kohler, stood over a free kick 25 meters out. Earlier, Ilgner had positioned his wall perfectly to blunt a similar attempt by Stoitchkov. But the Germans are elderly and occasionally prone to lapses, as South Korea and Belgium had proved in the preceding games, and the wall had a few loose bricks. Stoitchkov left-footed the equalizer over them and under the bar as the goalkeeper watched flat-footed.

The Germans have come back so often that the next cross, in from Zlatko lankov ahead of the trailing Hässler, was the most shocking of all. The balding Letchkov dove and bullseyed it off his lone tuft of hair and beyond Ilgner - or any goalkeeper in the world, for that matter. The Germans need not be reminded that Letchkov, who celebrated his 27th birth-day on Saturday, plays for Hamburg. Nor that Bulgaria is beginning to look a lot like Denmark, the last to upset Germany in the 1992 European final. As the Bulgarians waited to learn whether Balkan neighbor Romania would join them in the final four, the surviving Brazilians and Italians each striving to become the first to win four Cups - have now to be wondering

On Saturday, family and friends gathered in the afternoon to drink coffee in the by vines. The mood was optimistic.

"Hagi is at the peak of his career," said losef Bukoese, a 58-year-old ethnic Hun-garian talent scout. He is the creator on the field but he also finishes."

Nineteen years ago Bukoese, who played for Romania in the 1960s, discovered Hagi one morning in a school yard. "It was clear he was very talented," he recalled. Bukoese took Hagi under his wing until 1981 when the young soccer star joined the national youth division in the capital Bu-charest. Now Hagi earns $900,000 a year for his Italian League club Brescia.

It wasn't always like this. Twenty-nine years ago Hagi was born in the village of Sacele, 30 miles (48 kilometers) north of courtyard of their five-room house shaded Constanta. He was the third child of a peasant couple.

In Sacele, people grew corn and sun-flowers and raised sheep and goats. Soccer was seen as something strange.

Hagi's family moved to Constanta when Gheorghe was 7. His mother remembers her son always asking for money for tennis shoes and soccer balls.

"We didn't really have that much money, but you can't refuse your own child," said the tiny dark-eyed woman whom Hagi closely resembles.

Hagi's father, Iancu Hagi, 61, is a con-struction worker. He earns $83 a month. "Before we could only dream of hope," said his father. "Now we can feel it."

On Wednesday, Brazii will faces the winner of Sunday's Sweden-Romania game, set for the Rose Bowl in Pasadena.

Branco's goal -scored off a free kick in the 81st minute after he drew a foul by racing in on the attack — blazed by Dutch goalkeeper Ed De Goej after just missing Romário. The striker had jogged back and forth in front of De Goej as Branco prepared to kick, then arched his back as Branco's shot whizzed by. It missing Romário's jersey by an eyelash and sneaked in the state of the Goeffe left. just inside the post to De Goe;'s left.

Although Branco's shot was the one that gave Brazil its victory before a crowd of 63,998 in the Cotton Bowl, the play that's likely to be debated for years — especially in the Netherlands — was an offside that wasn't called against Romario seconds before Bebeto, his fellow superstar striker, chested the ball ahead to himself, then vecred left past one sliding Dutch defender and De Goej. That left the net unmanned, and Bebeto easily tapped in the ball for Brazil's second goal

Several of the Dutch players reacted furiously at the lack of a call. Their coach, J Dick Advocaat, leaped off the bench, his palms turned upward as he shouled at the referee, Rodrigo Badilla of Costa Rico. Advocaat was circumspect afterward, limiting his criticism to saying "Everybody could see that it was offside. This shouldn't happen at such a level," But forward Dennis Bergkamp showed no such restraint.

"The referee is blind," the Dutch star said This is something I'll never get over. This is one of the saddest moments of my chip over the head of the Brazilian goalkeeper Claudio Taffarel just one minute after Bebeto's disputed goal had made it 2-O. Bergkamp — steadfastly ignoring Brazil's marking and harsh, knockdown fouling — hopped and cradled a pass into the penalty area with his left foot, then lobbed the ball over the ourushing Taffarel in the game'a 64th minute.

When teammate Aron Winter scored inthe 76th minute on a perfectly executed header off a corner kick by Marc Overmars, the players on the Dutch bench bolted up, began hugging each other and waving their warmup jerseys and towels.

The Brazilians might have succumbed to shock or pressure at that point, knowing they'd blown a two-goal lead, knowing their national media had hounded them about lackluster play despite the 4-0-1 record the team carried into Saturday's game. Several players had admitted they had begun to feel pressure from their countrymen back home, too.

An estimated 30,000 Brazilian fans have come to America to see this World Cup. And if this national team doesn't, as expected, end Brazil's 24-year drought without a World Cap title, the howling will so intense that it will make the noise that came from the Dutch camp Saturday sound like a whisper.

East Side, West Side, According to Doctorow

By Bruce Weber

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Entering Bryant

Park, the rejuvenated public square behind the New York Public Library, the novelist E. L. Doctorow regarded it, a lovely greensward on a lovely day, with the appreciative surprise of an infrequent visitor to the city.

The park was reopened two years ago after a much-publicized renovation, but for Doctorow, a 63-year-old Bronx native clad like a natty tourist in a blue blazer and crisp white trousers, it was a discovery.

"They've done a nice job with this. haven't they?" he said.

It was a curious moment, because Doctorow, perhaps more than any other contemporary writer, is associ-ated with New York. Of his nine novels, seven are set principally in and around the city.

"Big as Life," written in 1966, is basically a science-fiction novel in which Manhattanites wake up one morning to find two giant human fig-ures standing immobile in the Hudson River. But since then, the books have fixed New York at particular moments in history and sought to render it realistically.

In fact, a key scene in his new book, "The Waterworks" (Random House), occurs on these very grounds, albeit more than a century ago, when a reservoir stood on the spot. Here it is described in the novel. The time is 1871:

"It was an unnatural thing, the reservoir. The bouldered retaining walls were 25 feet thick and rose 44 feet in an inward-leaning slant. The design was Egyptian. The corners were relived by trapezoidal turrets, and bisecting each long wall face were temple doors. You went in, climbed up a stair to the parapet, and came out in the sky. From this elevation the rising city seemed to fall back before something that wasn't a city, a squared black expanse of black water that was in fact the geometrical absence of a city."

Some of those walls still exist, beneath the Public Library. Before venturing out into Bryant Park, Doctorow, with a library escort, had gone to see them — for the first time. Then he went upstairs to examine a photograph, circa 1899, of the reservoir, emptied on the eve of its destruction.

'Weird, isn't it?" he said, looking at the photo, which was also new to him, and he noted that in his description he had left out the wall that divided the reservoir in two.

E. L. Doctorow on his view of New York: "It's a visionary thing."

It's not so weird, really. Doctorow's relationship with New York has only partly to do with familiarity; the rest is, well, fiction. Though he keeps an apartment in Greenwich Village, be spends most of his time at his homes in New Rochelle and Sag Harbor, New York. And though the narrator of "The Waterworks," a newspaper editor named McIlvaine, is someone who knows the city intimately, Doctorow, seated now on one of the green folding chairs scattered about Bryant Park, admitted that he does not. "I don't know the city as well as McIlvaine," he said, his tone characteristically avuncular and wry. "It seems to me that most people know the city better than I do. My view is not documentary. It's a visionary thing."

In "The Waterworks," Doctorow has written something of a detective story that begins when a reporter, Mar-tin Pemberton, disappears. One villain whose twisted experiments on children and elderly men serve as a metaphor for the evil spirit pervading the time. The action takes place all over town, on sites recognizable now as SoHo and Greenwich Village and east midtown, what was then the northern reaches of the metropolis. "We live in the past to an astonishing degree, the myths we live by, the presumptions we make," Doctorow said, "Nobody can look in the mirror and not see his mother or father. So maybe there's not such a distinction to

It has been pointed out by more than one commentator that, read in order of their chronological settings, beginning with "The Waterworks," Doctorow's novels describe a century of life in New York.

"Ragtime" (1975) depicts a cacophonous New York at the outset of World War J. "Billy Bathgate" (1989) is a coming-of-age novel about a young man's apprenticeship to the city's most glamorous 1920s gangster, Dutch Schultz. "World's Fair" (1985) chronicles a facsimile of Doctorow's own Bronx boyhood in the 1930s. "The Book of Daniel" (1971), about the children of the executed Bronx couple, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, is set in the 60s but ventures frequently back into the McCarthyite '50s. The title novella in "Lives of the Poets" (1984) concerns a writer alienated by 1970s ennui.

"It's nothing I planned, of course," Doctorow said. "I thought I was writing about life. But in my mind, life and

New York are the same." What this suggests is that though the details are various, the New York that finds its way into Doctorow's novels is. in many ways, the same one, which is a reflection of the one we live in.

"New York is a gravy-stained, spit-flecked, bituminous, rough-necked livid place that we fall into in his pages, and if that sounds familiar, it should," the historian Simon Schama wrote of Doctorow in The New York Times Book Review, adding that the Doctorovian past "is plainly held up as a mirror in which we are meant to see our own time and manners."

But Doctorow is not quite willing to cop to writing literally about either the

"I will tell you what's the same, though," he said. "There's an incredible amount of energy here that should be anarchic, but is somehow con-trolled. I loved writing the street scenes in 'The Waterworks.'" He recalled as emblematic a scene that takes place on the corner of Broadway and Prince Street, what with horse carts and pedestrians a busy intersection even then. And indeed, it's a moment of stopped time, a moment when the perpetual frenzy circles around a person who sees through it with perfect clarity.

"Martin Pemberton is going down Broadway," Doctorow said. "And the rain begins, the thunder claps, horses shy and their hooves fly up and in the middle of everything Martin sees this white coach. And just then a veteran sticks a tin cup under his nose, and he hears the newsboy. And all these things are going on, and through it all, he has a sighting: He sees his father. That's my New York."

But what shall we call the overheard remark itself? Eavesdrop is a verb, rarely used as a noun. When my telephone was wiretapped, the content of that eavesdropping activity was called the tap, or when recorded in written form, the "tap transcript." No noun existed for the overheard conversation itself.

Switching to a linguistic mode, I asked what an overhear is. Long pause, during which I presume the prosecutor was mentally reviewing Rule 6 (e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure forbidding the disclosure of grand jury proceedings. Assured of the query's exclusively lexicographic thrust, the lawyer promised to get back to me by fax.

Which he did. An overhear, in law-enforcement circles, is defined by diGenova as "surreptitious interception (usually electronically) of oral communications."

Eavesdropping has a nice etymology. The eaves of a house are the ends of the roof that overhang the windows. The envestrop is the water that drops from the eaves. An intrusive person who wants to overhear what is going on inside stands. next to the window, close up against the wall,
